The York Mystery Plays are a cycle of dramatic works originally performed on wagons throughout the city. They date from the fourteenth century and follow the Biblical narrative from Creation to Last Judgment. After nearly four hundred years without being performed, the York Mysteries were revived in 1951 when local amateurs led by professional theatre practitioners staged them during the festival of Britain. Playing a Part in History examines the ways in which the revival of these plays transformed them for twentieth- and twenty-first-century audiences.

Considering such topics as the contemporary popularity of the plays, the agendas of the revivalists, and major production differences, Margaret Rogerson provides a fascinating comparison of medieval and modern English drama. Drawing extensively on archival material, as well as newspaper and academic reviews of the plays in recent years, Playing a Part in History is not only an illuminating account of early English drama, but also of the ways in which theatre allows people to interact with the past.

Margaret Rogerson is a senior lecturer in the Department of English at the University of Sydney.
